It is beyond dispute that cannabis prohibition has been a social, economical and environmental disaster, and it is clear that existing polices are failing to reduce either drugs use or drugs harm.

It has criminalised millions of otherwise law biding citizens, given rise to organised crime, increased underage usage, diminished freedom, promoted disrespect for the law, but it has not curtailed usage.

Cannabis is not just a drug issue, it affects us all in many ways, To find out how the legalisation of cannabis can improve all our lives read over leaf.

I am happy to discuss the issue with you further.

The situation we find ourselves in today is the result of mismanagement of the earth's natural resources by a small group of multinational companies and political parties unsympathetic to the well being of the nation and their local communities.

Cannabis is far more than a recreational substance - it is a vital source of medicine, fuel, food, building materials, plastic, paper and much, much more.

Cannabis derived fuels and oils can replace every type of fossil fuel energy product cheaply and cleanly, and if introduced to Third World nations, hemp could drastically cut our overseas aid and reasons for war, while raising the quality of life there by quantum leaps.

The more green resources humanity utilises, the better it will be for future generations, and on a global scale, the plant that offers the most potential is cannabis hemp.

Hemp can produce thousands of eco-friendly products. Hemp grown for fibre will take the paper and textile industry out of the hands of the multinational corporations and put an end to deforestation whilst widespread use of highly nutritious hempseed could help to feed millions of starving people.

There are thousands suffering from cancer, Aids, multiple sclerosis, spinal injury, epilepsy, asthma, insomnia and stress-related illnesses who admit to needing to resort to cannabis to relieve their pain. Allowing people to use cannabis instead of more dangerous and often ineffective pharmaceutical products would save the NHS billions of pounds.

Ending prohibition means a massive influx of revenue for schools, the NHS etc. with police free to chase real criminals, whilst more prohibition means arresting and embittering thousands of citizens, sending them to prison and destroying their families.
